

08 TALKING TO OTHERS

Feedback is a gift.

SEASON
1

WEEK
8

FOCUS CONFIDENCE

KEY PHRASE
“I am enough.”

SUMMARY

This practice teaches fighters to give and receive feedback using the C.A.P. formula. The coach explains each part with examples of what to do and what to avoid, then runs a role-play where fighters observe the coach demonstrating common mistakes and respond with C.A.P. feedback. Training opens with a shuttle race, reviews every punch and defensive move, builds freestyle four-punch combinations on the mitts, and closes with a C.A.P. partner feedback round and a ladder burnout.

OBJECTIVES

By the end of this practice, fighters will:

Use the C.A.P. formula to give and receive feedback with peers

MATERIALS

- Fighter’s Mindset journal
- Mitts & gloves
- Writing utensils

COACH MESSAGE

15 MIN

SAY

We’re all here to get better at boxing, and part of that means helping each other grow. When you work with a teammate, you have an important responsibility: to give honest, kind feedback so she can reach her goals.

Feedback is a gift. We don’t stand by and watch someone make the same mistake over and over, we step in to help. Friends don’t let friends get hit in the face.

When someone is throwing punches, she can’t see herself. She’s relying on you to point out mistakes and give her the feedback she needs. One way we do that is with a formula: C.A.P.

C COMPLIMENT Saying something specific and true that your partner did well.

DO

- Talk about something you actually saw, don't guess.
- Focus on technique or effort.
- Be positive and encouraging.

DON'T

- Say something vague like "good job" without explaining why.
- Compliment things you didn't see or that aren't true.
- Use mean or sarcastic words.

"You stayed focused when you were tired."

A ADVICE Giving one helpful correction or tip your partner can try next time.

DO

- Be kind and gentle, not bossy or mean.
- Focus on one thing, not everything at once. Keep it short.
- Make it easy to understand and try.

DON'T

- Tell her she's bad or useless.
- Give too many tips at once, it's confusing.
- Be vague, like "do better."

"Next time, try taking smaller steps so you don't lose balance."

P PURPOSE Explaining why your compliment and advice matter, how they help your partner or the team.

DO

- Connect it to a goal you're all working on: staying safe, being fast, being smart.
- Show how the advice makes your partner stronger or better.
- Keep it positive and encouraging.

DON'T

- Make it sound like a punishment.
- Ignore how it helps or how it connects to the goal.
- Be confusing or negative.

"That helps keep you safe from punches," or "so you can stay balanced."

Ask the group why it matters to start with a compliment, and gather responses. Think about how you'd feel if someone came at you with only negatives, you probably wouldn't be motivated to continue.

ACTIVITY · ROLE-PLAY Directions

1. Fighters sit in a circle.
2. Coach gets in the middle and purposely shows bad technique: hands not up by the face, feet too close together, dropping the punch low instead of returning it high, low effort or slow punches.
3. Fighters observe and raise a hand when they have feedback using C.A.P.
4. A fighter shares her C.A.P. feedback.
5. Repeat, or ask fighters to demonstrate the bad technique as practice.

INTENTIONS

5 MIN

- Fighters share their intention for practice.
- Encourage fighters to use C.A.P. with their partners all practice long.

JRNL JOURNAL · WEEK 8

JOURNAL P. 12-13

BOTH JOURNALS

C.A.P. is compliment, advice, purpose. Think of a time you needed to tell a friend something hard. How do you give someone honest feedback and still protect the friendship? Write what you would actually say.

TRAINING

30 MIN

SHUTTLE RACE Partners · 3 rounds

- Fighters pair up. One runs, one punches.
- Call the combination. The puncher throws it without stopping while her partner runs down and back.
- When the runner returns, they switch jobs and run it again.
- Round 1: 1 · 2
- Round 2: 1 · 2 · slip · 6
- Round 3: 1 · 2 · roll · 2
- Clean beats fast. A combination that falls apart resets to the start of the round.

REVIEW Everything so far

- Call punches 1 through 6, then the slip and the roll, predictably then unpredictably.
- Run the combinations the team already knows: 1 · 2 · 3 · 2, 1 · 2 · slip · 2, 6 · 3 · 2 · roll · 2.
- Correct form on the spot, this review is what the freestyle work is built on.

WATCH OUT

Before combination building, every fighter should know which numbers are her lead hand and which are her rear hand. Odd numbers are the lead hand, even numbers the rear. Check it out loud.

MITT WORK · FREESTYLE 4-PUNCH COMBOS 2 rounds

- Boxers build their own four-punch combination and call it before they throw it.
- Walk the combination through slowly first, at half speed, before either fighter throws it for real.
- Build combinations that alternate hands: right, left, right, left, or odd, even, odd, even. Two punches from the same hand in a row stall the combination.
- Mitt holders hold for whatever the boxer calls.
- Switch roles.

PARTNER FEEDBACK ROUND C.A.P.

BUILD IT IN TWO PARTS

1 · 2 · slip · 6 · 3 · 2

then add roll · 2 · 3

Write the combination on the board so fighters can see it while they work.

- Boxers run the first six punches on the mitts, twice through, before the roll is added.
- Once that part is clean, add roll · 2 · 3 and run the full combination.
- Pause. The mitt holder gives C.A.P. feedback: compliment, one piece of advice, purpose.
- Boxer runs it again with the advice applied.
- Switch roles and repeat.
- Circulate and coach the feedback itself, not just the punches.

☐ BURNOUT · LADDER

7 MIN

- Start at five reps of each: up-downs or burpees, plank shoulder taps, squats. A tap on both sides counts as one.
- Climb the ladder, six, seven, eight, for as long as the burnout runs.
- Fighters who fall behind keep going; nobody finishes alone.

☐ SHOUT-OUTS

3 MIN

- Ask for a few team shout-outs: what did you see our team do that helped us get to our goal?
- Individual shout-outs follow, each ending with snap clap.
